Who should go for hearing tests?

Individuals with Tinnitus

If you experience ringing, buzzing, or any persistent noise in your ears that others cannot hear, you might have tinnitus. This condition can be a symptom of underlying hearing loss or other health issues. A hearing test can help determine the cause and extent of your hearing issues.

Individuals Regularly Exposed to Loud Noises

Exposure to loud environments, whether at work (construction sites, factories) or during leisure activities (concerts, clubs, sporting events), can damage your hearing over time. If you're frequently in such settings without adequate ear protection, it's crucial to have your hearing assessed.

Those Experiencing Hearing Difficulty

Difficulty understanding conversations, especially in noisy environments, asking people to repeat themselves, or the need to increase the volume on devices are signs of hearing loss. Early detection through a hearing test can significantly improve your quality of life.

People Who Talk Too Loudly

Unknowingly speaking louder than necessary can be a sign of hearing loss. It often indicates that you're compensating for your inability to hear your own voice at normal volumes.
